Master jeweler Jim Conley to work with Valerie's Gallery

Special

announcement -
- I'm pleased to announce that Jim Conley, goldsmith and silversmith, will be working with us to offer his jewelry for sale, and to provide repairs and custom work. I've long admired Jim's quality workmanship and think this will be a wonderful addition to our shop. He brings expertise, experience, solid craftsmanship and due to his previous store, a following of customers. Many of you may remember when Jim owned Conley's Goldsmith in Market Square. After selling the business, he took some needed time off and has decided to work once again in a venue in Newburyport. Here is the link to the story about this in today's Newburyport Daily News. Jim will be at Valerie's Gallery on Saturday mornings for personal consultations and repairs beginning March 21.

About Conley's Gallery

I am a master goldsmith and silversmith. I made designer "mixed-metals" jewelry with gems for Shreve, Crump & Low (Boston), and I designed pieces for Cartier's (New York).

I have made for churches communion plates, chalices, and wine cups. I custom made sterling lotus flower finger bowls for an Arabian sheikh, sterling jewelry, different karat gold jewelry and hand made platinum jewelry.

Over the years, jewelry stores and other designer jewelers have sent me the jobs that they didn't have the skill to do for their customers. I am known for my level and breadth of skill in hand making jewelry and repairing jewelry, holloware, and flatware and for being able to access gems from good commercial grade to the rarest and best quality available.

About J the J

I started making jewelry when I was 17. I apprenticed to an art jeweler on Cape Code working for for him after school and through the summer. When I graduated from high school, I moved to Boston to go to college for pre-med. There, I set up a work bench in my studio apartment, where I made jewelry and sold it to stores around Cambridge and Boston to help with living expenses. After a few years of college I realized that I wanted to be an artisan and so after that year ended, I sought out another apprenticeship which I found in Newburyport, Ma. with the Old Newbury Crafters; a company of great artisans who hand forged flatware, hand made tea sets and punch bowl sets and made a line of hand forged jewelry for the top stores in the country. <http://www.silvercrafters.com/index.htm> This further pushed my skills and within a couple of years decided to break out on my own. I then designed a few pieces for Cartiers in New York and next started to design and make things (jewelry, misc flatware, gift items) for Shreve Crump and Low in Boston. After several years focusing on making things for S C & low, I decided to start my own store. I found owning a store and all the requests that came in the door, motivated me to learn more aspects of fabrication in all the noble metals and increase my skills in stone setting. I now do a lot of work in platinum and pave' down to 1/2 pointers. I owned my store (Conley's Gold and Silversmiths) for 23 years where I also represented other artists in metal, glass, pottery, wood etc. A few years ago, after my wife died after a long battle with cancer, I decided to sell the store and just create objects of art. I now sell through Valerie's Gallery in Newburyport, Ma or people can call me directly (978-621-7333). <http://www.valeriesgalleries.com/conley.html> <http://www.facebook.com/valeriesgalleries?v=photos#!/album.php?aid=147915&id=111665334435> <http://www.facebook.com/valeriesgalleries#!/notes/valeries-gallery-newburyport/part-of-jim-conleys-collection/405403447759> Thanks for visiting this page. ## Jeweler's work returns to Port

By Victor Tine

NEWBURYPORT — When Jim Conley's wife died in 2005, Newburyport's premier goldsmith-silversmith decided he needed a change.

Conley sold the jewelry store he had operated in Market Square since 1989 — and at other Newburyport locations for five years before that.

"I needed a mental break," he said yesterday, seated in his Kingston, N.H., workshop. "I decided to sell the business and do what I really enjoyed, goldsmithing and silversmithing."

On March 14, Conley will return to the downtown Newburyport retail scene by placing his works in Valerie's Gallery at 26 State St. He'll also be available in the gallery Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. to consult about jewelry repairs and custom projects.

He described returning to Newburyport as "kind of what they call a sweet sorrow because of memories of my wife."

Jim and Cathleen Conley had been together for 24 years when she died on Feb. 28, 2005, at 57. She was for many years a clinical manager in the Anna Jaques Hospital recovery room.

Cathleen Conley had beaten cancer twice before, in 1983 and 1998, but she received a diagnosis in May 2004 of bone cancer from which she would not recover.

But he also said "Newburyport is a little in my blood," because his great-grandfather had a pharmacy on State Street in the 1880s.

Valerie Stainton, owner of the store, said she is "very excited about having Jim Conley's work here."

"Some of my customers have been Jim's customers, so it's a natural fit," she said.

Conley said that when he got the urge to come back to Newburyport, he knew he wanted to be in a setting where a wide range of arts were represented, and Valerie's fit the bill.

"I walked around downtown, and I knew I wanted to be in a store with a nice clean look and that had a lot of beautiful things by a lot of artists," he said.

Jim Conley, 58, has been a goldsmith-silversmith since high school. The Ipswich native apprenticed to an artisan on Cape Cod. In college, where he started studying pre-medicine, he found he could earn money on the side by making items of jewelry, something he found gratifying.

"I decided I was really enjoying the artistic side of myself," he said.

After a stint at Old Newbury Crafters, Conley started selling pieces to top-of-the-line stores, such as Cartier in New York and Shreve, Crump and Low in Boston.

He opened his own store, Conley's Goldsmiths Silversmiths, at Merrimac Landing in 1984, then moved briefly to the Merrimac Street building that houses the Chamber of Commerce today before finally setting up shop in Market Square for 16 years.

His arrangement with Valerie's Gallery will allow him to work on new pieces and still get an occasional taste of retail.

"Selling the store was a good thing. It helped me clear my head and refocus," he said. "I enjoyed the store, my customers and the people I worked with, but it took a tremendous amount of time. And then I wasn't at the bench, and I'd miss that, too."

Part of Jim Conley's collection

Jim Conley and I were talking last weekend about his history in Newburyport with Conley's Goldsmiths Silversmiths and the variety of pieces he has made over the 20+ years for customers. In addition to rings and jewelry, Jim has crafted a chalice for a local church, as well as a beautiful commemorative box lined with zebra wood for a very grand wedding. If you would like to have your own beautiful custom piece made (like some of these people did), just let us know or stop by to see Jim in person on most Saturday mornings 10-12:30.
